
Advancing Prospective Students (Part 3)

Posted by signor - 2007/10/16 22:23

I salute all Nkomazi Voice forum readers, It is always with perfect pleasure and bliss to write.

There forces of darkness have been at play recently, newspapers in KZN were running a story about two ghost students who were apprehended during the exams. People have lost morals, how on earth can you joll and bash the whole year and expect that someone will write the exams for you. It certainly will take you nowhere because when we talk about tertiary we talk about a place where brainless never survives. I do not want to know the reasons but writing exams for other person in his absentia is fraud, that person should be forfeited the qualification and be thrown into jail. (both of them).

It is advisable that people should strive hard for their own lives, we grew up listening to Sgayoyo Magonga saying, "Nguleyo naleyo ndvodza iyawudla umgwaja wesagila sayo". Funny how people use others for their own expediency, and funny how people receive corrupt money in exchange for fraud. Some do not receive money but sexual favours (Heh, you want to say Sabelo said it).

As students are writing, there are evil forces at work that work tirelessly to make others forget, cause endless headaches and much stress. Some have family problems some have relationship problems. I am surprised by those who worry about relationship problems when they should worry about their future.

Having said all this, I would like to appeal to parents and the community in large to show support to all learners, and that the learners must learn the saying that says, "Market place problems should be left in the market place", meaning that an exam room is not a place of problems but a place where one has to retrieve what he has learnt. December Mpapane (during my maths days) used to say, "If you think you are smart and fail to listen, you will be the last to come out of the exam room, and the only one to fail the exam." It was sad but true, imagine writing for a long time only to fail in the end.

I can rather write a novel but the onus is no longer on teachers but on students to show their worth. There world is waiting for them (Matriculants). The ball is in their courts, this is not time to sit down and say, "If it was January I should have done that, I should have done this."

Regards,
Sabelo G,

=====

We live to achieve

Posted by Mandla_ - 2007/10/25 15:22

that certainly is a hilarious story, having someone write the exams for you? on a serious note though it shows that some people are not willing to work towards achieving, on their own. i cant imagine being proud that i am a university graduate when i know i never wrote a damn thing, someone else did it for me, whatever happened to self respect? or do these people just lack ambition? i look up to everyone who set their sights on achieving 1,2,3 and then give it their all, even if you try and fail but the glory is immeasurable when you have achieved your goals, and the less help you had getting there, the better! we youth need to be more assertive and not be afraid to want more out of life. if somebody tells you you cannot do it make even more of an effort to prove them wrong, we live to achieve!

=====